1. COUNTRY HIGHLIGHTS

Nearly three-quarters of respondents in Finland (74%) consider climate change to be a 'very serious' problem, equal to the EU average and a 9 percentage point rise since the previous survey in 2015. One in five see it as the most serious problem facing the world (20%, EU average 12%).

Nearly two-thirds (65%) say they have personally taken action to fight climate change in the past six months, significantly above the EU average (49%). Yet when given specific examples this rises to 93% (EU average 90%), suggesting that many do not associate certain actions with tackling climate change.

- Three-quarters of those surveyed try to reduce waste and regularly separate it for recycling (75%, EU average 71%), while over two-thirds say they cut down on consumption of disposable items whenever possible (67%, EU average 56%).

- Over four in ten (43%) say they regularly use environmentally-friendly alternatives to their private car, a proportion considerably higher than the EU average (26%).

Respondents in Finland are more likely than the EU average to agree that fighting climate change and using energy more efficiently can boost the EU economy and jobs (84%, EU average 79%), that promoting EU expertise in new clean technologies to third countries can benefit the EU economically (85%, EU average 77%) and that more public financial support should be given to the transition to clean energies (85%, EU average 79%).
